BioPharma Shakti Mission

New Talent Blueprint for Pharma and Health

INTERVIEW

With the announcement of the BioPharma Shakti Mission in the Union Budget 2026–27, India has signalled a strategic intent to emerge as a global hub for biologics and next-generation therapeutics. The mission goes beyond policy—it reflects a long-term vision to strengthen domestic research, scale up advanced manufacturing, and reduce dependence on imports in high-value biopharmaceuticals.

The biopharma sector today sits at the intersection of science, technology, and public health. From vaccines and biosimilars to gene therapies and precision medicine, it is rapidly redefining how diseases are treated and managed. With increasing investments, a growing startup ecosystem, and stronger industry-academia collaboration, the sector is poised to become a key pillar of India's knowledge economy. It also holds significant potential for job creation—ranging from research scientists and data specialists to regulatory experts and manufacturing professionals.

In this context, Senior Journalist Shri Chandan Kumar Choudhary engages in a conversation with Shri. Manoj Joshi, Secretary, Department of Pharmaceuticals, Government of India on behalf of Employment News. In this interview, Shri Joshi highlights a crucial perspective: for young people, the biopharma sector is not merely about employment—it is about contributing to a transformative phase of India's development, where innovation, healthcare, and economic growth converge.

Q: India has long been recognised as the “pharmacy of the world.” In this context, which domains are likely to drive the next phase of its pharmaceutical growth?

A: India's next phase in pharma is really about moving from volume to value—from just making generics to creating innovative therapies. We will continue to be strong in affordable medicines, but the real opportunity now lies in areas like biologics, precision medicine, and advanced vaccines.

Put simply, we were known for making medicines at scale. Now, we need to be known for complex treatments and innovation. The idea is to combine our manufacturing strength with deeper scientific capability and grow into a global biopharma innovation hub.

Q. You have emphasised the need for risk-led R&D in the sector. What does this shift mean in practical terms for India's pharmaceutical ecosystem?

A: Pharmaceutical innovation is not a straight, predictable process—it involves uncertainty, long timelines, and continuous experimentation. Today's emerging therapies, such as cell and gene therapy or genome editing, operate at a very precise level, even down to individual genes. To keep pace with this, we need to embrace that uncertainty rather than avoid it.

In practical terms, risk-led R&D means accepting that not every experiment will succeed—and that's perfectly normal. In fact, one successful breakthrough can often justify many failed attempts.

For India, this shift requires building a supportive ecosystem: better research infrastructure, strong clinical trial systems, reliable patient data, and robust yet enabling regulation. While we excelled in generics due to clearer pathways, innovation and discovery demand a different mindset—one that allows researchers, startups, and companies to take calculated risks without being discouraged by setbacks.

If India aims to lead in discovery-driven growth, it must become comfortable investing in—and trusting—the process of scientific uncertainty.

Q. In your view, what are the key building blocks needed to move India from manufacturing strength to discovery-led innovation?

A: There are a few critical pieces that need to come together. First, we need patient capital—investment that understands science and is willing to support long-term research, not just quick returns.

Second, we need specialised talent. Not just researchers, but experts in areas like biologics, bioinformatics, analytics, regulatory science, and advanced manufacturing.

Third, strong clinical trial capacity is essential, because a discovery only matters when it can safely reach patients. Fourth, we need efficient and reliable regulatory systems—delays or uncertainty can slow down innovation significantly.

Finally, there is the need for better translation—bridging the gap between research and real-world products. India already has strong scientists and manufacturing capabilities. Now, we must strengthen the journey from idea to product to global market.

The real shift is this: earlier, we asked, “Can we manufacture at scale?” Now, we must ask, “Can we discover, test, approve, and deliver to the world?”

Q. The Union Budget announced Biopharma SHAKTI with an outlay of Rs. 10,000 crore over five years. What key gaps does this initiative aim to address?

A: Biopharma SHAKTI is designed to address a series of interconnected gaps in the ecosystem. One of the biggest is the “missing middle” in funding—where early research gets support, and large companies invest later, but many promising ideas struggle to move from lab to market.

It also focuses on building specialised talent in areas like cell culture, fermentation, quality analytics, and regulatory processes. Alongside this, it strengthens clinical trial infrastructure and regulatory systems.

Importantly, the initiative also looks at areas often overlooked—like delivery devices, packaging, and fermentation-based manufacturing. So, in essence, Biopharma SHAKTI is about creating a complete ecosystem—spanning funding, skills, trials, regulation, and manufacturing depth.

Q. How important are biologics and biosimilars for India's global biopharma ambitions?

A: They are absolutely central. If generics defined India's first phase of success, biologics and biosimilars will shape the next.

India has a strong opportunity here—not just scientifically, but economically as well. The cost of development, especially clinical trials, can be significantly lower in India compared to countries like the United States. This gives us a clear advantage in terms of both speed and affordability.

At the same time, many key biologic drugs used in treating cancer, diabetes, and autoimmune diseases are going off-patent in the coming years. This opens up a major opportunity for biosimilars.

The real challenge—and opportunity—is not just to produce these therapies, but to make them affordable and accessible at scale. In many ways, this decade could well belong to biologics, and India is well positioned to play a leading role.

Q. Where do you see the jobs of the future in the biopharma sector?

A: Biopharma is not just about lab scientists—it's a wide and growing job ecosystem. Opportunities will span research, manufacturing, clinical trials, data science, regulatory affairs, quality systems, and medical devices.

For instance, if India expands to a large number of clinical trial sites, it will create demand for roles like trial coordinators, biostatisticians, research nurses, data managers, and ethics professionals. On the manufacturing side, biologics need skilled professionals in areas like cell culture, sterile operations, and quality control.

So, this is a broad-based opportunity—open to students from pharmacy, biotechnology, medicine, engineering, IT, statistics, and event management.

Q. Is entrepreneurship becoming a viable career option in this space?

A: Absolutely. Today, young professionals are no longer limited to jobs in labs or large companies—startups have opened up a third pathway.

Entrepreneurs can work on areas like AI-driven drug discovery, diagnostics, biosimilars, or innovative drug delivery systems. Of course, biopharma startups come with challenges—long timelines, deep science, and strict regulation. But with the right policy support in funding, mentoring, and approvals, this space can see many more young innovators stepping forward.

Q. How can institutions, curricula, and training systems evolve to build a future-ready workforce for India's biopharma sector?

A: Building a future-ready biopharma workforce requires a comprehensive shift—across institutions, curricula, and training systems. At the core of this transformation is the need to move from purely theoretical learning to practical, industry-aligned education.

Institutions like NIPERs have a critical role to play here. They can serve as centres of excellence, not just imparting knowledge but also developing hands-on capabilities in areas such as biologics, biosimilars, regulatory science, and bioprocessing. In a sector like biopharma, understanding how a product is developed, tested, approved, and delivered is just as important as knowing the science behind it.

At the curriculum level, the biggest change needed is to break traditional silos. The industry today requires professionals who can connect multiple domains—biology, chemistry, data science, engineering, and regulation. Courses must therefore integrate emerging areas like genomics, AI-driven drug discovery, clinical research methods, and advanced manufacturing. Learning must also be grounded in real-world applications, helping students understand the full journey from lab to market.

The future workforce will be defined by this convergence. While strong grounding in one discipline remains important, the ability to work across fields will be the key differentiator. Drug development today is a collaborative process involving scientists, engineers, data experts, and regulatory professionals working together.

In addition, there is a clear need for specialised, practice-oriented training programmes. While degrees provide the foundation, short-term, hands-on training in areas like biologics manufacturing, clinical operations, regulatory documentation, and data management can bridge the gap between education and employability.

Taken together, stronger institutions, updated curricula, interdisciplinary learning, and targeted training will be essential to create a skilled talent pool—one that can support India's ambition to lead in the global biopharma landscape.

Q. How will developing over 1,000 accredited clinical trial sites strengthen India's clinical research ecosystem?

A. This could be a real game-changer. It will help shift India's image from just a manufacturing hub to a credible global destination for clinical research.

India already has key strengths—a large and diverse population, skilled medical professionals, and varied disease profiles. But to fully utilise these, we need strong infrastructure, standardised systems, and strict ethical oversight. Accreditation ensures exactly that.

A large network of trial sites will improve the speed, quality, and credibility of research. It will also allow India to participate in earlier stages of global drug development—meaning we won't just manufacture medicines, but also help shape them from the beginning.

Q. How will strengthening the Central Drugs Standard Control Organisation (CDSCO) help accelerate innovation in biologics?

A. In today's biopharma landscape, a strong regulator is not a barrier—it is an enabler of innovation. As therapies become more complex, especially in biologics, the need for scientific and specialised regulation becomes even more critical.

Unlike simple generics, biologics involve living systems and require more rigorous evaluation. If regulatory capacity is limited, approvals can become slow and uncertain. Strengthening CDSCO with more scientific expertise and trained reviewers will help make the process faster, more predictable, and more credible.

In essence, better regulation doesn't mean relaxed standards—it means smarter, more efficient decision-making that supports innovation.

Q. Why should students consider a career in the biopharma sector today?

A. Biopharma is one of the most exciting sectors today because it brings together science, technology, healthcare, and nation-building. It offers not just career growth, but also the chance to make a meaningful impact.

Young professionals can work across diverse areas—from cancer therapies and vaccines to AI-driven drug discovery, clinical research, and advanced manufacturing. The range of opportunities itself makes the sector dynamic and future-ready.

More importantly, this is the right moment. India already has a strong pharmaceutical base, and the next phase is driven by innovation in biologics and advanced therapies. For young people, this is not just about a job—it's about being part of a sector that will shape India's future.

Parliament Passes Transgender Amendment Bill Strengthening Legal Safeguards

Parliament has passed the Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Amendment Bill, 2026. The most

Bill is the removal of self-perceived gender identity. Instead, it based on biological or physiological traits, including intersex variations. The new law also narrows recognition by excluding some socio-cultural identities and transmasculine individuals. At the same time, the Bill strengthens penalties for abuse. It introduces stricter punishment for begging or bonded labour under the guise of transgender identity. Social Justice Minister Shri Virendra Kumar said the Bill aims to protect dignity, reduce discrimination, and bring stronger safeguards for the transgender community.

7 Empowered Groups Formed to Tackle West Asia Crisis Impact

The Government has formed seven empowered groups to address the long-term

Modi said these groups will focus on key areas such as fuel, fertilisers, gas, “Team India” approach to manage the crisis. Shri Modi reiterated that dialogue and diplomacy remain the only solutions to restore peace and said India is in touch with countries including Iran, Israel, and the United States to push for de-escalation. Highlighting challenges in securing essential supplies like crude oil and fertilisers, he stressed the need for greater self-reliance. He also warned against black marketing and hoarding, directing states to take strict action. The Prime Minister said the government is exploring all possible sources to ensure energy supplies and minimise the impact on citizens amid the global crisis.

Upgraded Visa Tracking System Gets 5-Year Extension

The Cabinet has approved

Immigration, Visa, Foreigners Registration and Tracking (IVFRT) scheme from April 2026 to March 2031, with a total outlay of Rs. 1,800 crore. The IVFRT platform integrates visa processing, immigration clearance, and foreigner registration into a single digital system. It aims to streamline services, reduce processing time, and improve transparency. The government said the upgraded system will help facilitate legitimate travellers while enhancing surveillance, tracking, and national security mechanisms.
